

Update on Oak Foundation's approach to addressing Covid-19

latest update: 10 April 2021

This global pandemic is a stark reminder that no matter who we are or where we come from, we are all in this together. Since the beginning of the pandemic, we have been working to refine our operations to uphold and even improve support for our grantee partners. To that end, our Trustees have committed to maintaining our global funding levels this year. They have also increased grant-making to help our partners through these unprecedented times. Read our Annual Report article for more information.

In most of our locations, we continue to work remotely. We are guided by the advice of public health authorities in our various locations and rigorously practice social distancing norms. Regardless of our physical workspace, please know that we remain committed to the mission of our foundation, and we look forward to being able to visit with you again in person.

Our approach is guided by our values: We seek to be respectful listeners and partners during the uncertainty brought on by the global pandemic. We aspire to be responsive to change, adapt to unexpected consequences from external developments, and shift our expectations as necessary.

Our support is based on the needs and unique situations of our partners: We thank our partners for the exchanges they have had with our programme officers. We understand that many of our partners are struggling to support their staff and adapt to changing operational needs at a time when stress levels are high. We also know that this is not easy for the communities we serve and that each one of our partners faces unique circumstances that require individual approaches. We will continue to work with our partners to find appropriate solutions.

Our approach is in line with the US Council on Foundation's pledge and the European Foundation Centre's statement of solidarity: We are proud to have committed to support our partners in ways that are guided by the US Council on Foundation's philanthropy pledge and the European Foundation Centre's statement of solidarity. Some of these elements have included moving project grants to core grants, modifying agreed outcomes, and adapting what we ask of our partners by postponing reporting requirements, site visits, and other demands on their time.

Oak's Trustees have committed an additional USD 24 million to address the Covid-19 global crisis: We recognise that organisations have faced unusual challenges and unprecedented demands, so we have provided additional support to reach our shared hopes for the safety and wellbeing of the communities we serve. Stories of many of these grants can be found on our website and in our Annual report here.

We reaffirm our commitment to safeguarding children and communities: We remain committed to preventing abuse and promoting the safety, protection, wellbeing, and development of children, and even more so during this extraordinary time. We expect our partners to continue with their safeguarding policies and apply those policies to any new programmes and services implemented to respond to the crisis. Please refer to our website for more information.

We remain dedicated to providing capacity building and organisational development support to our partners: To that end, we have developed a page on our website with a curated list of organisational resources, tools, and ideas for not-for-profit organisations impacted by Covid-19. We encourage our partners to visit that page for more information.

Finally, we hope this note provides some reassurance to our partners that our support is unwavering during these challenging times. Together we will face the uncertainty and support our communities.

With my very best regards,

Doug Griffiths
Oak Foundation's President
